

This is not a photo gallery

This is an underground gallery – a simulated underground roadway with key safety features found in a typical underground mine roadway.

The original concept was mooted by various employer and employee organisations over the decades until finally a private company (Lennon's) went ahead and built the much talked about 'essential safety tool' for new entrants to the underground sector of the coal mining industry.

John Lennon was the driving force behind the building of Queensland's first underground coal mine roadway constructed specifically to help new entrants understand basic underground safety concepts. The gallery has been viewed by many in our industry – from the (then) Commissioner for Mine Safety and Health to school groups – and all spaces between.

For those readers who have been in our gallery for training, you would surely agree that apart from the compressed air breathing apparatus (CABA) and the CABA refill station, there is nothing that could be deemed as 'high tech'. Training safety does not need flash facilities or rocket scientists as trainers. Safety training needs dedicated instructors who go the extra mile to make safety training a lasting experience and a training company prepared to outlay resources to enhance learning for new starters.
